

I would invent an app that charges your phone. All you need to do is open the app and shut your phone off. It's not like other apps that you pay money for and it cleans your phone. This app can help people because if you are in an emergency and you don't have battery you can't do anything about it. Except with this app you can just leave your phone and it charges super fast. The bad thing is that you can't have other apps open. Basically this app finds everything you have and closes it and all the battery drained is restored. When you use your phone it dies quickly and if you're watching videos or other things it drains it faster. So with this app you can just open it run it and it will restore battery quickly back to your phone. Other apps say that you can use apps don't work. You're wasting money on those.